TUESDAY, : SEPTEMBER 27, 1881 A REVOLUTION IN FUEL. The solution of the problem which now distorbs the people of Cincinnati, Pittsburg and other smoke-cursed cities, is likely to be found in the use of water gas, which is now in me in fifty cities and towns of the United Sister and Canada for illuminating purposes. In some of these, the Age of Steel tells us, notably in Beltimore, the new process has driven the old coal gas process entirely out of the business; while in New York it is affirmed that at least one-half the illuminating gas used at present is water gas, In Europe water gas has been lately introduced with marked success as a fuel in metallurgical and other industrial operation and the importance of this innovation is attracting widespread attention and comment. The friends and advocates of water gas as the "fuel of the future" may, and doubtless will have years of hitter opposition still to contront; but with every year the battle they are fighting becomes less fierce and the period of final victory less remote. In Sweden, and elsewhere in Europe, sater gas, manufactured by the "Strong" process, has been introducas a fuel in a number of large industrial establishments, and with the most flattering
